Tribute to football icon

A permanent tribute to legendary Lisbon Lion John Clark is in the works in the Monklands village he called home.

Celtic icon Clark, who passed away last June aged 84, played his part in the team's 2-1 win over Inter Milan in the 1967 European Cup final.

John was born in Chapelhall in 1941 and is set for lasting immortality in the village with a bronze statue.

COUNCIL WANTS ANSWERS ON FUTURE OF HOSPITAL

Questions put to the Scottish Government

NEIL MCGRORY

North Lanarkshire Council is to pursue government assurances over the future of the project to replace Monklands Hospital.

As the Advertiser reported last week, in a bitter blow for patients, Health Secretary Angela Constance said ministers could not afford the estimated £2.1 billion price tag of the new hospital "within our current financial landscape".

At a recent meeting of the full council, members voted through a motion from independent Airdrie North councillor Alan Beveridge and seconded by Conservative member Sandy Watson (Airdrie South) asking the council's chief executive to write to the government asking for confirmation that the business case be approved and the hospital remains on track to open by 2031.

Councillor Beveridge called upon his fellow members to cast aside political differences and show unity and determination to secure the hospital's future, while Councillor Watson added that the decision to replace Monklands had been made in 2017 and although staffed by "dedicated and hardworking professionals" the actual building is outdated and in urgent needs of modernisation.
